

Detroit Looks to Health Law to Ease Costs

As Detroit enters the bankruptcy process, officials say insurance exchanges could pare tens of millions from the $5.7 billion the city owes in retiree health costs.

A Race to Save the Orange by Altering Its DNA

Growers turned to genetics in hopes of building a tougher orange tree. But would the public accept genetically modified food?

Time to Hard-Delete Carlos Danger

Huma Abedin stands by her man, but will it matter?

Weiner’s Campaign Manager Quits After Latest Revelations

Danny Kedem resigned as Anthony D. Weiner’s campaign manager after learning of the mayoral candidate’s latest online conduct, two people who were told of the decision said.

The Charitable-Industrial Complex

As more lives are destroyed by the system that creates vast amounts of wealth for the few, the more heroic it sounds to “give back.”

From Roving to Riches, a 44-Year Journey Together

Susan and Steve Schutz have built a greeting-card empire, raised three children (including a congressman) and weathered her depression, all side by side.

Stranded by Sprawl

Are spread-out cities killing the American dream?

A Plan to Save Yosemite by Curbing Its Visitors

A proposal for Yosemite National Park would, among other things, restore more than 200 acres of meadows, reduce traffic congestion and close rental facilities for bicycling.

Thief Gets Away With Estimated $50 Million in Jewelry at a French Riviera Hotel

The crime at the Carlton Intercontinental came days after a member of a gang of jewel thieves escaped from a Switzerland prison.

Dozens Killed as Bus Plunges in Italy

Highway police in Italy told state radio that the bus slammed into the cars, which had slowed for heavy traffic, before plunging off the road and falling dozens of feet.

Obama Says Income Gap Is Fraying U.S. Social Fabric

Widening income inequality and the weak recovery have undermined Americans’ belief in opportunity, President Obama said in an interview.

Status and Stress The poor and powerless are at greater risk of early death.

Our Pulchritudinous Priesthood Personal trainers are becoming a must-have accessory in modern life.

Going for Bolingbroke An 18th-century approach that could work for 21st-century Republicans.

Caroline Kennedy, Catching the Torch In a public role that friends say she has been building a lifetime toward, Caroline Kennedy, the “guardian of the flame,” is poised to add to her family’s rich legacy.

Worries Mount as Syria Lures West’s Muslims Westerners go to Syria motivated by a desire to ease suffering by defeating the government, but there is concern that they will return home with jihadist zeal.

Merger Is Set To Create World’s No. 1 Ad Company Together, Omnicom Group and the Publicis Groupe would become the world’s biggest advertising company, setting their sights on digital media.

I’m Still Waiting for My Phone to Become My Wallet It’s long been predicted that consumers would be able to wave their cellphones to buy everything from clothes in a department store to beers in a bar. Why isn’t it happening?

Bad in the Bones Hiding in plain sight for five seasons, Walter White, the protagonist of “Breaking Bad,” is television’s ultimate dark entrepreneur.